SYDNEY IN 70MM

Ascot Theatre Projection Room

Compiled by Doug Loudon

The Barclay Cinema was located at 681 George Street Sydney on the site originally occupied by the Haymarket Theatre [1916]. The theatre was converted into an indoor golf course and reverted back to cinema in 1935 renamed the Civic Theatre. In 1938 the Civic was renamed the Palladium for live theatre and films under the direction of Hoyts and Greater Union prior to a full building refurbishment.

With a new seating capacity of 950 and with 70mm capability, the Barclay Cinema opened on 21st December 1962 with The Guns of Navarone. The Barclay first 70mm was Barabbas on 16th August 1963.

The Hoyts Plaza was located at 600 George Street. The Plaza stood on the site of the Colonial No 1, renamed the Deluxe and finally as Hoyts Plaza in 1930 with a 1650 seating capacity. The Plaza was the 2nd cinema to premiere Cinemascope with How to Marry a Millionaire on 21st January 1954 and showcased three strip and single lens Cinerama. The Plaza was equipped for 70mm in 1964 when Baker booth was widened for the Victoria 10 projectors and It's a Mad, Mad, Mad, Mad World.

The Hoyts Century was located at 586 George Street opposite the Hoyts Regent Theatre which showcased the first Cinemascope film The Robe on the 9th December 1953. The Century stood on the site of the original Crystal Palace Theatre [1912]. The Crystal Palace closed during the depression and after remodelling where a cinema and offices were built within its original shell, reopened as the Hoyts Century theatre on the 26th January 1938 with Warner Bros. The Life of Emile Zola starring Paul Muni. The Century was refurbished in 1965 with a new 865 seating capacity and equipped for 70mm with Victoria 8 projectors premiering My Fair Lady on the 28th July 1965.

GRANDEUR 70

The table below is the Grandeur 70 release in Sydney between 1958 and 2017. As a date reference for this page, the release date for Carousel filmed in CinemaScope 55 has been included ...
